

ANDREW J. MALEHORN STORE AND RESIDENCE

62-68 WEST MAIN STREET

This two-building unit consists of 2 nearly identical structures; each is two stories tall, shed roofed, L-shaped, and with 5 bays. These two structures are of interest when viewed as part of the row beginning with no. 58 West Main Street; the row presents a fine unified group in a City more given to individual statements. On April 13, 1883, the entire north side of this block was leveled by a fire. The block was quickly rebuilt, and this, coupled with the fact that this central section was rebuilt by the same family, doubtless explains its unity. The row is valuable in the view it gives us of a small, rural, Anglo-German, mid-Atlantic settlement a century ago, a value that has been increased by the alterations that have taken place at the ends of the block - the Penney's store to the east, and the Exxon Station to the west, so that the block now contains representatives of commercial architecture spanning 100 years.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The two buildings that once houses the shop of Malehorn and of Kretzer look south to the north side of West Main Street (St. Route 32) about 100' east of that street's intersection with Carroll Street in Westminster. The two buildings are identical in form (two-story, shed-roofed, L-shaped 5 bays) but are different in decoration. Both buildings have commercial activity on their ground floors, and residences above. Number 62-64-66 has three central doors on its ground floor; each door is identical, containing one large pane of glass below a rectangular one-light transom. The extremes of the ground floor are largely windows, a 24-light display window to the east and a large plate glass window to the west. The four eastern bays rest below a bracketed modillion cornice; the western most window rests below a plain cornice. The second floor windows are all 2/2, double-hung sash windows with 4 course gauged, flat arches, white wooden sills, and black louvered shutters. The windows are all regularly spaced. Above is a motif fairly common during late-Victorian era; the use of cornice-bracket-string course. The cornice is molded and is adjoined by modillions placed between the six scroll brackets which support it. The string course is decorated with a band of pelleting. As is the case with all buildings in this block on the north side of Main Street, a teutonically-decorated band rests in the area defined by the brackets string course and cornice. The south front of the other building (these buildings are done together as they share, besides a party wall, common history, and basic form. Their differences seem superficial to their similarities.), has relatively recently been encased in vivid kelly green plastic tiles. It presently has its bays in the pattern DWDWD (this placement could well be original). Doors and windows are all of recent makeup, i.e., glass, large sheets of it, and aluminum. Above, the five 2/2 windows are shutterless between their 3 course gauged, flat arches and their white wooden sills. The tops of the windows are on line with those of the building next door, but their bases are a bit higher. The cornice-bracket-string course is continued across this building, but is slightly altered (as the arrangement is on each building in its group) as the cornice is richly dentiled.

As noted, the buildings take an L form. This is evident on the north fronts, which are two bays long east of each building's L. The eastern building has a pair of 2/2 windows per floor; the north front of the L has a 2/2 window to the east of a 6-panelled door. (The door is approached by a single flight of wooden steps rising from the north.) The other building probably originally had a two tier porch on its north front, as the present front projects to the north 10' longer than does the other building, and it is sheathed in aluminum siding, a sure sign of recent tampering, as that material is often used to enclose porches. The siding presently has two 2/2 windows regularly spaced on each floor. The north front of the L is blind, but the east front has a northern door approached by a single flight of wooden steps rising from the north, and

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The significance of each of these buildings, as is almost always the case with all buildings, is that they are part of a larger scheme. In this case, they are of interest in the total Westminster's townscape of course, but their interest is magnified when viewed as part of the row beginning with no. 58½ West Main Street (or, perhaps, beginning with no. 58). The row 58½-68, of which these two buildings are the western half, presents a fine unified row in a City more given to individual statements. The row is of interest in its use of the normal 5-bay front, in its incorporation of Germanic decorative details, and in the way it plays with the cornice-bracket-string course roof line motif (each building has a slightly different one). Thus, the value of the buildings in the row, in the view they give us of a small, rural, Anglo-German, mid-Atlantic settlement a century ago, has been increased by the alterations that have taken place at the ends of this block - the Penney's store to the east, and the Exxon Station to the west are fitting representatives to the 20th century, as this row is of the 19th. The entire block shows the changes in commercial architecture that have taken place over the past century.

On April 13, 1883 the entire north side of the block between Carroll and John Streets was levelled by a fire. At that time there were 14 buildings squeezed onto 8 lots (including, in the center, the F. K. Herr and Brothers Coach Shop). The fire also spread up Carroll Street destroying the newly built (1866) Lutheran Church and parsonage. According to an article in the April 14, 1883 American Sentinel, the fire was the result of a card game played in a stable and illuminated by a candle. The man accused of setting the blaze by turning over the table was a black called Hanson Dorsey and, according to the article, "owing to the threat of lynching, the jail was guarded by 22 men who were well-armed." Thus, all buildings in this row, nos. 58-68 West Main Street were apparently conceived of and built together, which helps explain their remarkable unity. Perhaps someone ought to write an essay on devastating fires and the building booms that follow (not to aquate F. K. Herr with Wren).

The section of the row that we are concerned with here consists of the western half of lot 6 of the Catholic Church's Subdivision. The entire lot was leased for 99 years from the Redemptionists by an organia 2/2 window to the north.

A finely proportioned, 2-story, gabled roof, unpainted, 4 course common bond building is located within the area defined by the eastern building's L, but a few feet to the north of it. Two-over-two windows are opposite each other on the eastern and western fronts, and a 6-panel door, to the south, provides an entrance. The west front of no. 68 faces a gas station and is blind, below its shed roof, except for 2, small, 2/2 windows which appear, rather forlornly, in this facade. The east wall of no. 68 is a party wall, as are both the east and the west walls of no. 62-64.

zation called Troxell and Diffenbaugh on May 13, 1863; their rent was $24 a year (Carroll County Deed Book 30, Page 3). Troxell and Diffenbaugh sold their interest for $100 to Titus Eckart on June 26, 1865 (33/435), and Eckart sold half of lot 6 (our half) to Andrew J. Malehorn for $2500 on October 16, 1869 (37/509). This price for half of the lot, makes it very likely that some buildings were then erected. They show on the 1877 City plat. The 1887 City Directory lists Malehorn as having a post-fire store and residence at 62-64, and lists Louis Kreizer as having a store at 66, and one J. T. Erb as having something to do with 68. Malehorn sold the lot on St. Patrick's Day, 1899, 30 years later, for the same price he paid for it ($2500); he sold the lot to Sara A. Cover (88/363). Cover's executor, Charles E. Lippy, sold our property to its present owner, Carroll E. Myers, for $6540 on June 6, 1939 (170/518); Myers, by a series of deeds, has acquired titles to the whole row, certainly one of Westminster's finer architectural statements.
